Physical and Mental Fitness in Focus at Sea Island's Renowned Golf Performance Center

SEA ISLAND, GA – From golf balls crowded with dimples to club heads the size of coconuts, golfers are inundated with innovation aimed at improving their game. Yet, with the caliber of play now higher than ever, such advancements are meaningless if you lack the physical and mental fitness necessary to excel on the course.

Enter the Sea Island Golf Performance Center. Boasting a top-flight faculty, advanced training technologies, and a distinctive, holistic and personalized approach to performance enhancement, the Golf Performance Center emphasizes not only motor skills but also mental skills, with a total body-and-mind approach to today's game.

Long gone are the days when all a golfer needed was a good swing. "These days, the demands of golf go well beyond mere driving and putting skills," said Randy Myers, Director of Fitness at Sea Island Resorts and one of the Golf Performance Center's team of performance specialists. "Players cannot expect to overcome golf's many challenges without peak physical fitness and mental focus."

Indeed, one look at the steely-eyed strongmen of Sunday afternoon golf broadcasts – Jonathan Byrd, Davis Love III, and Zach Johnson come to mind – and you know the days of wide-waisted golf phenoms are limited. As the level of play advances at the professional level, even weekend golfers are feeling the heat.

Myers and his Golf Performance Center colleagues – sports psychologist Dr. Morris "Dr. Mo" Pickens, Jack Lumpkin, Gale Peterson, Jared Zak, Daniel Gray, and putting specialist Phil Kenyon – offer a customized, multi-disciplined approach to playing proficiency.

On the fitness front, Myers emphasizes the role of flexibility in injury prevention, creating customized stretching programs for guests to follow on Sea Island's links and after their departure. Stretching is so important to the game in fact, that Myers developed The Randy Myers Golf Stretching Pole®, which has been approved by the U.S. Golf Association (USGA) for players to carry in their golf bag on the course. It is the only piece of stretching equipment allowed on the course.

At the Golf Performance Center, players are not just given a golf handicap; they are also given a personalized “fitness handicap,” a golf fitness assessment developed by Myers. Assessing a player’s fitness handicap allows Myers to prescribe a fitness program to strengthen a player’s game.

Pickens focuses on the “mental game,” using on-course observation and personal sessions to size up individual golfers and provide them with the tools to think effectively, practice purposefully and play optimally no matter the pressure.

And close to the hole where it really counts, Shannon combines a formidable instructional presence with the latest technology to help golfers improve their short game. Shannon’s proprietary, multi-level Laser Optics Putting Improvement System® removes the guesswork from any putt, and a DVPutt® computer system is utilized to engrain consistency on the green.

Beyond the physical and mental aspects addressed by the Golf Performance Center team, players can look forward to professional club fitting services, swing evaluation with state-of-the-art technologies, and expert feedback from the center’s highly rated instructors, including some of the country’s finest teachers.

Assessment and instruction from Sea Island’s Golf Performance Center are the best ways to assure you play your best – regardless of what the course throws your way.
